

AUTISM CAMP

Building Equine Assisted Mobility Into New Growth

BEAMING
INCORPORATED

The motor, emotional, and sensory sensations associated with riding a horse have been found to particularly benefit individuals with autism. For those children who experience difficulty in comprehending directions, participating in equine-assisted games and activities encourages them to respond to the verbal cues provided by our PATH certified instructors. The rider must then communicate that direction to the horse. Riders become motivated to move and communicate. Throwing colored balls into buckets, touching horses while singing a song, identifying and sorting objects in the arena are just a few of the techniques used to encourage their minds and improve cognition during equine-assisted activities.
